TODAY'S CARICATURE

Evening Chat

There is a window in the city full of many beautiful things. Next time you go through town, look in Communism Confectionery and see if you do not agree with me. These things may not be particularly fancy—just plain, ordinary soldier comforts, but they will fill your heart with pride and you will be convinced that Fairmont has at least done her share and perhaps a little more. Varied personalities will look at these articles with varied thoughts. Those who have had a share in the making of them will be glad that and those who have done nothing at all in regard to them will be sorry indeed. There is nothing in these war times which gives one more personal pride and satisfaction than the knowing of a war duty well and lovingly done.

I know a number of people who have been unable to go much toward the aiding of our country. Some of these people have tasks piled up high continually which can not be set aside. Often we hear people saying, "Well, we must do what our country needs regardless of anything else." Our country needs various tasks accomplished and how to determine just which tasks come nearest the permanent good, remains a question.

To keep one's family well fed and well housed is just as patriotic as any other job. To keep constant watch over the little ones placed in our care; the baby sons and baby daughters, just now useless as far as any work from them is concerned, but nevertheless destined to grow up strong and capable efficient for country needs, remains another great patriotic service. To keep ourselves in fit condition so that we may answer our country's call in good condition, remains another patriotic service. To tear from one job to another from morning till night—doing physically ten times more than any one mortal can do, is the opposite of patriotism. Neglecting every home duty and spending all moments knitting, sewing, etc., is not altogether patriotic. I heard a woman say recently: "I haven't darned a stocking or cooked a decent meal for my family for months, but they'll just have to get along, for Red Cross work comes first. Her family were endeavoring to be patriotic."

It is very necessary thing in the world—good health. They were eating food hastily picked up at the last moment, merely heated or improperly cooked. They were going to work each day feeling very far from satisfied—and they were trying nobly to put it all down to the finest word in the English language—patriotism. I heard a man say not long ago—"I wear my socks while and when they get holes—I throw them away and get more. I hate holes!" So does any man with nice feelings. A hole in the beginning is a small affair—one easily remedied by a moment's time on the part of a housekeeper—let it run and it becomes an incurable thing. Socks sell now for from forty to seventy-five cents for merely cotton. Throwing them away wholesale might do much damage patriotically speaking. Money thus wasted will go a long way toward buying bonds.

So it becomes a matter of common-sense after all and a clear understanding of the word patriotism. These are not only personal sentiments but the sentiments of a number of our thinking men and women.

A funny thing happened in one of the picture houses last evening. A man was shown on the screen going through the process of sneezing. I believe he had a little snuff to aid in the undertaking. He did it so well—so true to life—that every time he sneezed, a gentleman in the audience sneezed also—immediately after and sometimes directly with him. Every body around got to laughing and for a time folks got more fun out of the gentleman in the audience than they did out of the gentleman on the screen. One woman in particular who sat directly behind, very nearly fell out of her seat every time the sneeze was repeated and it happened altogether about seven times. Talk about your mind influence; it reminds me of the man who very nearly died because, just as an initiation joke, he was blindfolded and told he was going to be bled to death. Some one stuck a pin in his arm and another fellow turned on some water which dripped slowly for a long time. The frightened young man coughed entirely and his comrades were quite some time bringing him to. There are many stories of this nature—but none quite so funny as the man who sneezed—and didn't even know he was sneezing when he didn't have to, just because he saw another fellow—quite unreal—sneezing away on a screen before his eyes!

Last night at the opera house some very original decorations in the shape of small colored legs dangling from a high box just above the stage, started everybody to laughing. "Jazz-beans," a small weird colored youngster with no slightest sense of humor, said he could not see the performers as well as any other way. It took some persuasion to remove him forcibly from too near the scene's activities. The trouble was that in order to keep this fringe of colored legs permanently removed from his location, some one must stay right on hand, and it was cheaper to tear down the decorations. A long line of them—about as far out of reach as an alley rope strung from window to window, was finally hauled in—much to the amusement of proper folks down below. Was there a grown-up present who didn't wish he were a kid and able to crawl out along the top rail of that box—high up above the organ pipes. There's a little more to this story also—but the rest of it didn't happen last night. A few nights ago, however, these organ pipes emitted some peculiar sounds as these same youngsters upon a few pertinent words in about whisper, it added much to a song in the process of singing and very nearly made the reputation of a comedian on the stage!

In Any Event.
 Two soldiers were conversing. One asked the other what made him enlist.
 Why, I had no wife and children—no one but myself to think of, and, besides, I like war. But how came you to join the army?
 Well, you see, I had a wife, and I joined the army 'cause I like peace.—Pearson.

Matt Crosby, of Ocate, N. M., has the distinction of being the oldest cowboy in active service in the United States. He recently celebrated his 51st birthday by breaking a wild young horse just off the range. On the same day he roped and tied a three-year-old steer in a little more than four minutes.
